What are some of the opportunities that EVs present to cooperatives? Come learn and talk about interacting political, economic, societal and technical influences to this exploding industry.

Jonathan Coulter is a technical subject matter expert for Advanced Energy, a nonprofit energy consulting firm. Since 2004, Jonathan has been collaborating with clients across the country to create market transformation by applying theory, research and personal experience to in-field installation details, local economic conditions and different contractor business models. The two industries he primarily focuses on are residential buildings and electric vehicle (EV) technologies. He has helped in the creation and continual improvement of state, regional and national guidelines and program resources (e.g. EPA ENERGY STAR New Homes, DOE Weatherization Standard Work Specifications, NC Electric Cooperative EV Strategies).

Upcoming Meetings:

January 17

America's Rivers and the Role of Engineers in Shaping America

Jonathan also lives his professional interests day-to-day through living in a low-load home he built nine years ago, as well as enjoying owning an EV for the past three years. He was educated at Warren Wilson College in Swannanoa, NC, where he received a BA in Liberal Arts and Outdoor Leadership.
