While practicing engineering in the civilian life, Mr. Agosto has included the "green" concept in traditional models. In a widening project for Osceola Parkway in Central Florida, the main street to Walt Disney World, he designed all luminaries using photovoltaic system, reducing the charge on the utilities and saving taxpayers dollars. For the new expansion at the Magic Kingdom at Disney World, he added an off-grid photovoltaic system to alleviate the expenses for the corporation. In other commercial designs, he has incorporated other "green" concepts such as natural ventilation, natural light, energy produced by wind in addition to photovoltaic, while preserving solid structures for areas affected by inclement weather.
